

Without a Tear

What began as a difficult situation has become one of encouragement. A very shy, introverted 3 year old girl started pre-school gymnastics about a year ago. Her mother would bring her in and she immediately began to scream and cry. Eventually, it was even suggested that the mother should leave during class and allow an instructor to work one on one. However, she finally got to the point where she could make it through one half of the class without crying. Today though, she gets on our bus, smiles and greets the driver/instructor and loves to come to class without one tear or frown. That transformation makes the instructors day!
